Carmignac Investissement¹ gained +3.82% in the first quarter of 2021 vs +8.86% for the reference indicator².

The Equity Market Today

While generating positive returns in the first quarter of 2021, Carmignac Investissement lagged its indicator after the very significant outperformance of 2020. Markets started out the year boosted by ramping vaccine roll-outs, hopes of reopening economies, highly accommodative Central bank policies and massive government fiscal support. This backdrop led to rising bond yields and a value-led equity market rally. Indeed, the former has been closely correlated with an outperformance of financials, while higher commodity prices have helped the energy sector record double digit gains – both sectors to which we were underexposed. On the other hand, rising interest rates penalized long duration growth assets that are core to our portfolio.

In the United States, the fast recovery of the cycle driven by efficient vaccination and impressive fiscal stimulus has led to a strong appreciation of the dollar, which weighed on Emerging markets and our Chinese positions. We do believe that this set of developments, which penalized our relative performance over the quarter, are likely to stabilize/reverse as we move through the year.

Our investment process revolves around identifying the most promising secular growth trends in order to invest in companies that can show strong growth regardless of economic conditions. This allows us to build strong convictions that can outperform over the long term, and to avoid secularly challenged businesses that fail to offer long term attractive and visible growth. Nevertheless, we will at times balance out our growth bias with derivatives positions on cyclical indices, as we did this quarter with long positions on European and US banking indices, which supported performance.

Portfolio Allocation

Over the first quarter we managed to generate alpha within our portfolio of secular growth names, in sectors like healthcare, consumer and communication services. However, the performance of our technology names lagged that of the reference indicator², especially those positions in China. With the Chinese economy further ahead in the cyclical recovery than the rest of the world, we may be seeing a slowdown in the months to come that will work to the advantage of companies with predictable earnings growth that we hold in our portfolio. Finally, coming into 2021 we had significant positioning in companies poised to capitalize on the reopening of Europe, such as Worldline (digital payments), and tourism-oriented companies such as Ryanair (budget airline), Amadeus (ticketing), AENA (Spanish airports), Bookings.com (online travel), and Safran (short-haul jet engines).

These underperformed our expectations in the first quarter as the European reopening has been delayed by poor vaccination distribution. We believe that over the second and third quarters European vaccinations will ramp, and its economy reopen to significant pent-up consumer demand.

Among our top contributors of the quarter, we note Volkswagen, where our investment thesis relates to the company's superior positioning for the transition from internal combustion engine vehicles to pure electric vehicles, but which also provided us with cyclical exposure within the portfolio. Alphabet and Facebook also recorded strong gains thanks to supportive trends in digital advertising. In healthcare, Chinese vaccine company Chongqing Zhifei and American healthcare service company Anthem both generated strong returns. Among our most significant detractors were Chinese datacenter company Chindata group and US software company Elastic – both with a high growth and valuation profile that was out of favor in the quarter but where we retain high conviction.

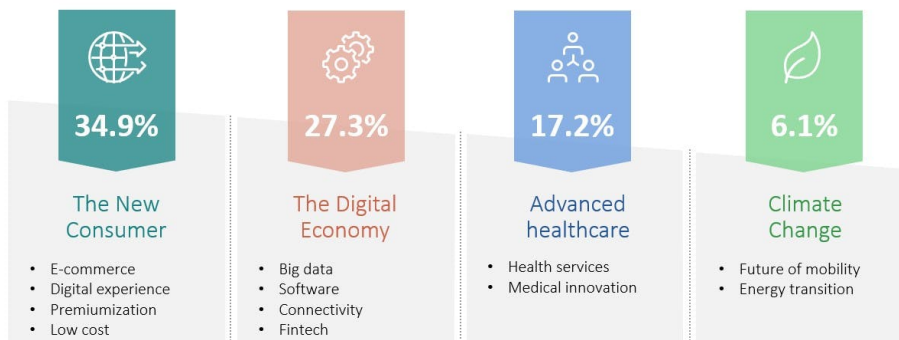

Our stock-picking approach aims to identify secular growth companies with strong and sustainable earnings prospects over time. We look for companies with large and growing addressable markets for their goods and services, and compelling penetration opportunities within those markets. We look for innovation and the ability to disrupt other market participants. Although the share prices of such companies are generally more expensive than the overall market, we believe they have the ability to rapidly grow into attractive valuations. On occasion it is possible to identify a company with vastly superior growth prospects to the overall market but that trades around the market multiple, as we found in the first quarter with Facebook. We moved to take advantage of this by making Facebook our largest position, as we have high conviction in its ability to not only continue to be a dominant force in digital advertising, but also to capitalize on monetization opportunities with Instagram, Whatsapp, and social commerce.

While Carmignac Investissement focuses on secular growth companies, its mandate does not exclude actively managing both the sizing of positions, their risk profile, and the overall cyclical nature of the portfolio. As we do believe we are in a rising interest rate environment due to the reflationary backdrop, we have actively looked to limit our exposure to the high growth/high valuation parts of the secular growth opportunity set. Simultaneously to this cautiousness on valuations, we built exposure to the reopening of global economies, mainly through companies levered to European tourism as mentioned earlier, but also to global tourism and mobility like Carnival Cruise Lines and UBER. Over the first quarter we also increased our position in Capital One Financial, the leading US credit card issuer, which provides the portfolio with both "reopening" exposure and leverage to rising rates.

Outlook

Overall, we maintain a liquid and solid portfolio of strong conviction investments, diversified in terms of geography, sectors and themes. Our core thematic revolve around:

Source: Carmignac, 31/03/2021. Others: 10.0%. Portfolio composition can change over time and without prior notice.

These disruptive themes have proven to be particularly resistant to the global economic downturn brought on by COVID. Many of their adoption curves have sharply accelerated, driving up penetration rates and sustainable profits.

As global economies reopen it is our strong belief that these penetration gains will be maintained: consumers and businesses will continue to embrace the powerful trends of e-commerce, digital payments, cloud infrastructure, online advertising, and medical advancement.
